SHIFTING SCENES.

In October, 1906, Senator Lodge was denouncing Hearst and Moran, and Secretary Root was denouncing Hearst and Murphy, both speaking in the name of Roosevelt. In October, 1907, Lodge, Root, Roosevelt and the rest of the saints and pharisees are voting with Hearst, and Parsons as their spokesman, is endorsing him and his policies. Hereafter we shall hear of Hearst's "policies." Instead of Roosevelt's "policies." Any change is agreeable. On October 8, 1906, Senator Lodge, speaking at a meeting which ratified the nomination of Governor Curtis Guild, said: "The nomination of Mr. Hearst in New York and Mr. Moran in Massachusetts, which are identical in character and purpose, proves beyond a doubt that the radical element in the Democratic party, which aims at class legislation, and strives to arouse class hatreds, tends also toward socialism and the destruction of private property. This element, which has been built up and fostered by Mr. Bryan in his two campaigns for the Presidency, as well as by the pitiable collapse of the 'safe and sane' candidate in 1904, is now powerful enough to take possession of the Democratic organization in two great states.

"The condition into which the Democratic party has thus fallen is in itself a menace to the welfare of the country. I am not one of those who rejoice in it, for I think it is just as important that the party of opposition should not drive out all its conservative elements, abandon all its traditions, and give itself over to radicalism and general indecency as that the party in power should remain sound and wise and safe." What opportunists these Republicans are. Those denounced as socialists and generally indecent last year, they are now hand and glove with.

AS TO RESULTS

It is now evident that the epidemic of trust-busting in the department of Justice is mere dust and feathers. The Washington Post adduces the following facts illustrating the situation: "With all the President's threats and activities, there are many more trusts in existence than when he began his campaign against them. He had a special fund of half a million to work with, and he has collected an approximately equal amount in fines. Just two undesirable citizens have gone to jail under Federal laws, and the good done has been largely offset by the practical whitewashing of the biggest fish in the net. The wicked men may breathe freely if they must be worse than Mr. Harriman to be punished.

"Now mark how the States manage the same job. In Ohio twenty-three wealthy and prominent citizens have been sentenced to nine months' imprisonment. In North Carolina clerks selling tickets in violation of the railway rate law have been sentenced to the chain gang, and their employers have been fined $30,000 in the most summary manner. In Philadelphia they have found a way to punish trusts without any statute, the common law being found adequate.

practically, as Judge Parker has contended in theory. This is getting results. One result is that the Federal government is hopelessly distanced as a punisher of trusts. Mr. Roosevelt took up the work where Peffer and Bryan dropped it, and easily outdid them. But the states took up the work where President Roosevelt dropped it, and are actually doing what he threatened.

"Bit discouraging to elope with a woman and then learn that she has eloped with another fellow two years before," comments the New York Telegram. On the contrary, there is always the hope that she will elope once more.

"This week the physicians are with us. Next week, the librarians," reads a paragraph in the Columbus (Ohio) Dispatch. Possibly, it refers to conventions, but at any rate, we quote it to show that the undertakers do not always follow the doctors.

"We use our eyes every second of the day, our brains less often," says a New York editor. We suspected that from the way New York people let the politicians lead them around by the nose.

"A mouse seldom lives longer than three years," asserts the Indianapolis News. It's nervous system is doubtless shattered by the way women carry on every time they see it.

With Mr. Spooner out of the Senate, Mr. Tillman will have to devote the early part of the next session to the careful selection of a new sparring partner.

The report that those Louisiana guides had several bears chained to the trees in readiness for the President's rifle, seems to have been greatly exaggerated.

It is again discovered that Shakespeare is not the author of his plays. However, this thing of trying to make the Bard of Avon another Ramezes II is a difficult job.

The growing popularity of Governor Hughes continually reminds the Illinois Democracy that it has a feather duster of its own in J. H. Lewis.

The bears got away from the President, and it might be worth while for the trusts to find out how they did it.

What Others Say.

AS TIMES CHANGE.
Speaking of the changes that have come over the country an old gentleman the other day remarked that "when he was a boy the drunkard was rated as a jolly good fellow and there were lots of them. Free and unlimited whisky was had at all houses and barn raisings, and the candidates knocked in the heads of whisky barrels and tagged them with their names and the office they wanted, then asked their friends to drink with them, the barrels being set out on the sidewalk, where all could see and drink."

Any of the old fellows around here can tell you that such things were of common occurrence, just as any one can tell you that such a campaign would make no votes at this time. The change has not been so much due to law as to the higher moral standard of the people.

Naturally there will be those who remembering the good days of their youth, will declare that people were as moral away back in the past as they are at present, and certainly there have lived good people in all ages. But the fact remains that one has but to recall the customs of the past and compare them with the customs of the present to ascertain that the standard of morality was never as high as it is right now.

While we talk about the soulless corporations, and are fond of telling about the lust for the dollar and the greed of gain, and all of that, we should not overlook the fact that there were those who were chasing the dollar as far back as there were any dollars to chase. We had no gigantic trusts ages ago, but we had landlordism and slavery and things a good deal worse than the present system of trusts. We have dishonest busness men at the present time—a few of them—but we had pirates upon the high seas at one time, and other dishonest men upon the land.

But so far as dishonest men are concerned, there never were fewer of them in the history of the world. Modern business is founded upon honor. A dishonest man can do no more than succeed in business than a profane man could succeed in the pulpit. Business has, in fact, made men honest. Nobody thinks of verifying the word of a business man, or of insisting upon his taking an oath. The merchant or manufacturer who would misrepresent things to a person with whom he was doing business would not last for a year. There used to be an old adage to the effect that it was wise to tell the truth to your lawyer and doctor. Modern business methods have amended the adage to include the banker. It is a maxim of business that one must tell the truth to his banker as well as to his lawyer and doctor.

There are still enough fake schemes in the land, to be sure, and there are thieves and pickpockets and swindlers of all kinds, but, taken as a whole, there is less of corruption, less of crime, and more of honor in the world today than there has been since human history began.—Springfield Daily News.

MAKING THE INDIAN WORK

It develops that the recently threatened Ute outbreak was due to an attempt to force evolution a little too hard. An Indian agent had tried to make the redskins work. In order to stimulate them to unwanted industry, he put them on half rations, to continue as long as they remained idle. A report submitted by Capt. Johnson shows that the Indians are hungry; their women and children are suffering. Now the Utes have never worked, either voluntarily or under compulsion, and they could not understand or sympathize with the new order of things when they gave vent to their indignation, the agent sent to their indignation, the agent sent to their indignation, the agent sent to their indignation.

Commissioner Leupp took the same view as the agent, saying: "We believe in providing work for them, and then in permitting them to go hungry if they will not accept the opportunity to make a living." "This sounds well," aptly remarks the Indianapolis Star. "But what of our treaty obligations? These Utes had possession of most of western Colorado and Utah. Our miners and prospectors wanted their lands. Their agent was impressed with this same idea that the important point in the Indian problem was to make the Indian work. He got into a row over it, and sent for the troops. The Indians thought that the troops were coming to make them work and the result was the White river massacre and the Ute war of 1880. The immediate damage was not great, but it drove at least 100,000 white people away from their work in the mountains, lost more work than the whole Ute nation could perform in ten years, and cost thousands of dollars.

After that the government made a treaty with the Utes, and took away their lands, putting them on reservations and agreeing to give them food and schools, but saying not a word about working. Now when a reformer comes along and demands that these same Indians should earn their bread by the sweat of their brow, they naturally object. They have never worked and they do not understand why they ever should. They have not been brought up that way. Their own traditions and habits of life and the enforced helplessness imposed on them by the conquering race have added to their natural inclinations toward a life of idleness. Eventually, no doubt, the race can be taught to labor by the education of their children and their gradual adoption of the white man's standards. But such evolution operates slowly.

Aside from the moral question involved in this unwarranted imposition it seems that the labor idea is a sort of humbug as a practical measure. Capt. Johnson says: "One hundred pounds of flour and a little patience is a more potent factor in the solution of this problem than 100 soldiers. If these people are furnished with sufficient food to sustain life through the winter, and they be allowed to send their children to day school instead of sending them away to boarding school, they will be just as amenable to control as the Sioux." The government has promised them these very things.—Plain Dealer.

BOARD HOLDS SHORT SESSION

Business of Importance is Considered.

LIBRARY TO BE OPENED

Exercises will not be held in the Building.

Work on the Interior is Progressing Nicely—Will be Completed About First of the Year.

The Library board met last night and attended to business of importance in connection with the opening of the new library to the public which will probably occur about the first of the year.

Practically all of the exterior of the building has been completed and the finishing touches are now being put on in the interior which is to be finished throughout in mission style. The contractor was unable to make the progress he anticipated because of labor troubles at first and later the non-arrival of materials, especially the steel and iron for the structure.

It was arranged to hold a special meeting in the near future at which time the purchase of new books for the library will be taken up. A large amount of money will be spent in repairing the bindings of the old books and in purchasing new books. When the new library is formally opened to the public it will contain almost twice as many volumes as does the present one.

The furniture for the structure which is made entirely of steel, darkened to match the mission style furniture, has already arrived in the city and just as soon as the interior decorations are completed it will be moved into the building.

Within a short time the actual date for the opening of the library will be decided upon and preparations will be made for the affair. The members of the board want as many residents of Marion to visit the new building on the opening day as possible and on account of the lack of room will not have exercises of any kind. There will be music and a good time, however, for all who attend the opening.

It is the belief of the members of the board that Marion will have as fine a library when the building is completed and opened as any city of its size in the state.

MRS. E. EVERETT DIES AT COLUMBUS

After a Lingering Illness with Tuberculosis.

Deceased Was One of Marion's Best Known and Highly Respected Women.

The death of Mrs. Elvora Everett, widow of the late M. F. Everett, and one of Marion's best known and most highly respected women, occurred at 9:45 o'clock Friday morning at the state hospital in Columbus. At her bedside at the time of her death were two of her children, Mrs. H. J. Nichols, of Marion and Fred Everett, of Cleveland, and Mrs. C. J. Nichols, of Marion.

Mrs. Everett's death was due to tuberculosis, from which she had long been a sufferer. Her demise had been expected for months. The remains will arrive here this evening and will be taken to the home of Mrs. H. J. Nichols, on Girard avenue. Funeral services have not been completed.

Mrs. Everett was a life-long member of the Free Baptist church and was an excellent Christian woman. Besides the two children already named there is another daughter, Mrs. Layton, who resides in the state of Washington.

The 20 minute sermon is a purely modern invention, and is proved by the number of pulpits and churches that are still to be found in many old churches. In the register of St. Catherine's Aldgate, the following entry, dated 1564, occurs: "Paid for an hour glass that hung by the pulpit, where the preacher doth make a sermon, that he may know how the hour passeth away, one shilling." A modern pulpit glass—probably the only one of its kind—is to be found in the Chapel Royal, Savoy. It is an 18-minute glass, and was placed in the chapel on its restoration in 1867.—Dundee Advertiser.

OSTEOPATHISTS MAY USE THE TITLE OF "DOCTOR"

Springfield, Ill., Nov. 8.—Attorney General Stead, in an opinion rendered today to Dr. J. A. Egan, secretary for the state board of health, holds that an osteopath is not guilty of unprofessional conduct within the meaning of the statutes by styling himself a "doctor" and that therefore the state board of health cannot revoke his license to practice. The attorney general holds that the term "unprofessional conduct" means dishonorable conduct in the practice of his profession, such as malpractice. The statute provides that only physicians who practice medicine and surgery in all its branches may style themselves "doctors," but there is no penalty for adopting the term by persons who do not so practice.
